Adverbs often end in “-ly” and modify verbs, adjectives, or other adverbs, whereas adjectives modify nouns. For example, in “She runs quickly,” “quickly” is an adverb, not an adjective. The answer key clarifies these distinctions by showing which words qualify as adjectives in the sentence.

Identifying Compound Adjectives

Sometimes, adjectives are formed by combining words, such as “well-known” or “full-length.” These can be tricky to identify, but the answer key highlights them clearly, aiding comprehension.

Recognizing Articles and Demonstratives as Adjectives

Words like “a,” “an,” “the,” “this,” and “that” also function as adjectives since they modify nouns. IXL’s answer key helps learners see these subtle examples, which are often overlooked.
